Kailash Satyarthi originally named Kailash Sharma was born on Jan 11, 1954, in the Vidisha district of central Indian state Madhya Pradesh. He attended Government Boys Higher Secondary School and completed his degree in electrical engineering at Samrat Ashok Institute, Vidisha and post graduate degree in high voltage engineering. He then joined a college in Bhopal as lecturer for a few years.

In 1980 he gave up his career and became Secretary General for the Bonded Labour Liberation front, he also founded the Bachpan Bachao Andolan, meaning save the childhood mission. Thus protecting the rights of more than 83000 children from 144 countries.

It is largely because Satyarthi's work and activism that the International labour organization adopted number 182 on the worst forms of child labour which is now a principle guideline for the governments around the world. In addition he established Good Weave International formerly known as 'Rug Mark' which manufactured rugs without the use of child labour. Satyarthi has highlighted child labour as a human rights issue as well as a welfare, malnourished and charitable cause. He argued that poverty, unemployment, illiteracy, population growth and other social problems last forever due to child labour. He has played an active role in linking the movement against child labour with efforts for achieving 'Education to All'.

Mr. Satyarthi and his colleagues were brutally attacked many a times while rescuing child slaves from sweet shops in Delhi and later rescuing children from the clutches of a local circus mafia. Despite these attacks Satyarthi stood with determination for the cause of child slaves. He has set up three rehabilitation-cum-educational centers for freed bonded children. Satyarthi along with another activist Mala Yusufzai was awarded the Noble Peace Prize in 2014 for their struggle against the suppression of children and young people and for the right of all children to education. Satyarthi is the 5th Noble Prize winner for India and the 2nd winner of the Noble Peace Prize, the first being Mother Teresa. Satyarthi lives in Delhi with his family.
